Review the NICE Workforce Framework. Are there certain areas that you would want to focus your career on? Explain which areas would appeal the most to you and which would appeal the least.

Under Oversee and Govern on the NICCS website about the NICE workforce framework is probably where I see myself operating the most. Mostly under legal advice and advocacy or strategic planning and policy. These areas appeal to me the most because I think my dream job would be something that combines my interest in government with my interest in cybersecurity. When it comes to government, I don't see myself leaving behind my technological background to completely pursue federal government-style law-making. However, when it comes to cybersecurity, I also don't see myself sticking to the programming side of it. While I have immense respect for people who do the actual programming when it comes to cybersecurity, I just don't see myself operating in that area. Which rules out the Operate and Maintain and the Protect and Defend category. This also rules out most of the software development categories. While I can't say I have definite experience in that, after taking some coding courses where I learned app and website development I don't think I would really enjoy a software development job, especially when the outcome has such a heavy weight on them to do well. I could also see myself working in the investigative world, under cyber investigation and digital forensics. I feel like I don't really know much about criminology, but from what I do know it's fairly interesting. I think cyber investigation could be a really interesting job, more so than digital forensics, but I still feel like both would make a fulfilling career for me.
