

In the attached video Keren Elazari is very knowledgeable when it comes to hacking. She made it somewhat easy to follow hacker jargon. As far as how the media makes hacking look is not entirely accurate. I think most online news articles and tv shows depict hackers as people dressed up in black hoodies in dark dungeons or basements. I also think hacking in media is always something big. It's never the exploits at a coffee shop or getting access to small business websites, it's always someone trying to get into NASA or military bases with very high-level security. I think most people don't take cybersecurity that seriously because media makes headlines when it is something big. It's always about hacking, not necessarily showing phishing attempts.