

In the article, I think the most five serious violations are, collecting information about children, illegal searches on the internet, sharing passwords, addresses or photos of others, faking your identity online and recording a VoIP call without consent. I think a lot of my choices all go together with each other. If you're looking up illegal searches on the internet and getting information about children, they're both highly illegal. It's the same thing with sharing information without people's consent, especially children. Faking your identity to even get in contact with children underage is also highly illegal. Recording phone calls without children's/parent's consent is also illegal. In conclusion, any of these when it comes to children is disgusting and are extremely illegal and if caught it should be punished severely.
