

In the TED Talk video, Davin Teo talks about his career in digital forensics. His path to digital forensics was not linear. He starts in a general IT background and saw an opportunity to switch to something that was very unknown to him and it paid off. It is reassuring that your goal is not necessarily something you will start out with or that your end goal is where you want to end up. Another part of his talk that stood out was how he emphasized the ethical side of his work. Teo explained how digital forensics isn't just about the technical process—it's about making a real impact by uncovering the truth and helping people. This aligns with my own interest in cybersecurity because I've always been drawn to roles where I can contribute to a larger purpose, like protecting people or solving issues that matter to society.
